

Sarcasm

is to say the opposite of what is happening at the time. It is as a type of humor, usually used to make fun of someone.

When should we use sarcasm?

- When someone says something very obvious
- When somebody does something wrong
- When something bad happens
- When something unsurprising happens

Types of sarcasm

- Self-deprecating sarcasm: This type of sarcasm expresses a deep sense of disapproval or despise towards oneself.
- Brooding sarcasm: Criticisms are made politely, yet an ounce of bitterness drips from the speaker's words.
- Deadpan sarcasm: This an emotionless expression that leaves a listener wondering whether the speaker is joking or not.
- Polite sarcasm: This requires a thorough analysis to fully comprehend. It may not be the most obvious form of sarcasm, but it's definitely the most clever.
- Obnoxious sarcasm: This kind of sarcasm is far from funny, in fact, it makes you want to punch the speaker in the face.
- Manic sarcasm: This is portrayed when the speaker appears to be losing his or her mind in a weird, demented manner.
- Raging sarcasm: Exaggeration and violent threats make up this category of sarcasm.

Situation	Sarcastic Remark
When something bad happens:	That's just what I needed today!
When someone has a low wage.	I work 40 hours a week for us to be this poor.
When you expected something to happen.	Well, what a surprise.
When a roommate is acting bizarre:	Is it time for your medication or mine?
When someone says something that is obvious:	Really, Sherlock? No! You are clever.
When someone does something wrong:	Very good; well done!

I spend $500 every month to look this ugly.

What planet did you come from?

Well, this day was a total waste of a good outfit.

Class is hell but with fluorescent lighting.

Not the brightest crayon in the box now, are we?

I think you left your talent at home.

Are you always this annoying or are you exerting extra effort today?

That speaker was so interesting that I barely needed to drink my third cup of coffee.

Tell me something I don't know.

Too many weirdos and freaks on this planet, not enough circuses to cater to them all.

Take a picture, it'll last longer.

It's so thoughtful for the teacher to give us all this homework right before Spring Break.

Terrific! This is exactly what I need right now!

I'm not crazy, I've just been in a very bad mood for since the day I came out of my mother's womb.

You call me lazy like it's a bad thing

This is an excellent time for you to become a missing person.

I'm busy now. Can I ignore you some other time?

He always finds himself lost in thought; it's unfamiliar territory.
